Information about the validity of the German permanent residence permit

Niederlassungserlaubnis is the German term for a permanent residence permit. It is therefor permanent.

The technical expiry date which is linked to your last national passport has no effect on the validity of your permanent residence permit. Hence, even if your passport is expired your permanent residence remains untouched and valid.

Combined with a permanent residence and a valid national passport the following is unlimitedly permitted:

- Unlimited residence in Germany
- Unlimited entries to Germany
- Unlimited working permission in Germany

All of the above mentioned also applies if the German permit card is technically not useful anymore. E.g. if the card is expired and you ordered a new national passport.

This document can be used for official authorities, banks and to whom it may concern.

On behalf

Norbert Strauch
